

Panzura VS Egnyte

Panzura is a global file system built for enterprises with large on-prem file sharing environments. Its core feature set was developed to meet the needs of traditional on-premises use cases.

While it performs well in remote-location file access and management use cases, it lacks the basic collaboration features other cloud-first file sharing solutions provide, like co-editing in Google Workspace and M365.

For any advanced governance capability, such as sensitive content discovery and classification, ransomware detection and file recovery and file sharing controls, Panzura requires integrations with 3rd party tools.

Egnyte has been purposefully built as a cloud-first, unified platform to combine the best of traditional file servers with the advantages of file sharing in the cloud.

The platform delivers a familiar file server experience for users to easily access and share files from anywhere, on any device. It requires minimal resources to deploy and manage and allows IT to maintain complete control over content with file-server features like audit reporting and NTFS-like folder permissions.

Egnyte also significantly simplifies data governance across 3rd party cloud and on-premises sources, helping to keep company files safe, secure and compliant.
